“the things I Hate & the things I Love about GIRLS!”

I HATE celebrity hounds. That is, girls who want to be around performers just because they're performers — girls who aren't attracted to me for my real self.

I HATE money-hungry girls — girls who want to be seen only in expensive, well-known places and who order their dinner from the “price side” of the menu instead of from the “food side”.

I HATE girls who act like dumbbells. Some girls think boys want that. You know — the “beautiful but dumb” type. Let me assure you, this is not true!

I HATE girls who love to go dancing at noisy discotheques. Sorry, I'm not the big crowd, bright lights type.

I HATE “plastic” girls. By that, I mean girls who pretend to be things they are not. Nobody has to play any kind of “role” in real life. Just be yourself and everything will be beautiful.

I HATE girls who are dishonest. Whether it's just a little fib or a big, blatant lie — dishonesty makes my blood run cold.

I HATE girls who hold back. Girls who are secretive or veiled about how they feel about me do not arouse my curiosity at all — they just turn me off!

I HATE conceited girls. Some girls just emanate an aura of self-concern. They're always glancing in mirrors, touching their hair or posing in some-artificial way. They might think guys don't notice it, but guys do — and they don't like it!

I HATE sissys. By this, I mean girls who are afraid to do things — like go swimming and get their hair wet, or walk in the rain without worrying if their clothes get soaked.

I HATE “babyish” or “childish” girls. Some girls think acting immature makes a man feel more masculine. Well, maybe that went over big in the old days — but it doesn't go over with any of us guys nowadays.

I HATE dependent girls. The clinging-vine type went out with covered wagons!

I LOVE vibrant, alive, stimulating girls.

I LOVE girls who are wide awake and ready to go. By this, I don't mean screamers or tomboys — but I certainly do mean girls who are bouncy and alert!

I LOVE girls who are good conversationalists, who are good listeners. That doesn't mean you have to know a lot about everything — but try to know a little bit about something, like the latest records or movies (so that you can talk in a knowledgeable way on subjects that we both care about.)

I LOVE girls who are happy. It's really a drag to be around dreary, sad-faced girls.

I LOVE girls who are funny. If you don't naturally have an outgoing sense of humor, at least be receptive to the wit of those around you.

I LOVE girls who are interested. By that, I mean girls who are interested in everything that goes on around them — such as their friends, their school, the current scene, adults and what's going on in the whole wide world!

I LOVE girls who are generous and unselfish, who will stop to help someone cross the street or give directions without making a big deal out of it. Girls who will give instinctively and lovingly of their time and efforts to the needs of others.

I LOVE unpretentious girls. Egomaniacs are a big bore! Actually, girls who think of something besides their looks, their clothes, etc., all the time are usually the most interesting girls to guys.

I LOVE attractive girls. So, in a way, I'll contradict what I just said before. But what I really mean is: girls should indeed take care of their hair, skin, looks, clothes and all that — but they shouldn't dwell on it all the time.

I LOVE girls who love being girls. You can be independent, outgoing and self-sufficient without giving up your femininity and warmth. Girl-type girls really turn me on — and on and on and on!
