ly good idea," says Donny as he takes his seat in the living room. "Actually, the Osmond family meetings are for the same purpose as our family sharing nights used to be. When we were little, we performed for one another. Now we're all so busy on our own, we get together at night to fill one another in on our day. Since we have such a big family, it's really a great way of keeping track of everybody."

When the meeting, led by Mr. Osmond, is over, Mrs. Osmond picks up the family Bible and reads a passage from it aloud.

"That's another very nice family tradition around here," Donny adds. "And when the reading is over, we all say goodnight, and go to our rooms and to bed. Another busy day is over." ● says.

As for Danny, he loves to tease everyone, and he teases Susan about liking carrots so much. "Susan Dey's hands are turning yellow," Danny says, "because she eats too many carrots. Soon she'll be all yellow."

David isn't so much of a tease Susan reports ("because I'm so mature," he'll joke), but now and then he'll call to her, "Hey, skinny!" On the other hand, David's the guy who'll often say something to make a girl feel good, especially when he can tell she's feeling a little depressed, or when things aren't going too well on the set. "You really look great today," he'll tell Susan. Or he'll just clap her on the back in a friendly way after a scene and say, "Good job!" Best of all, she always knows he means it!

Like Susan, Maureen loves working with her "brothers" and thinks they're fine actors. "It's amazing how they've changed in the time I've known them," she says. "Actually, we've all grown together."

The Bradys are now on their third year, and Maureen feels that they've really become like her second family. Not only do they do their show together, but they've made records together, gone on promotional tours together, and spent lots of time socially at each other's houses. All that makes them extra close.

If you ask Maureen what qualities she looks for in boys, she'll say, "sincerity, a friendly out-going personality, not someone who jokes all the time." And that's a description that fits Chris and Mike and Barry to a "T." Of course, Chris and Mike play their share of jokes on her, but Maureen says, "They're never mean. They're some of the nicest boys I know."

The Brady kids share a lot of the same interests and do a lot of the same things. Every one of them is a real animal lover, so they're always comparing notes on their pets and playing together with them. In the last year, too, the Brady boys have joined the girls in another activity and have taken up needle work (Maureen was a patient teacher) because it's such a relaxing thing to do during a brief break after a hard scene.

But Maureen is perhaps closest of all to Barry, especially since they spent two years in the same private classes on the set, studying mainly the same things—for instance French, which they both love.

Maureen's eyes are sure to light up when you mention Barry. "He's really great," she says, "Being his friend is like having another older brother, except one who's nearer my own age." In addition to friendship, Maureen really respects Barry a lot because he's so thoughtful and serious about what he does. "And he's always considerate of other people," she says. "And very helpful."

Since Barry and Maureen spend quite a bit of time together on the set and sometimes visit each other's homes, there had been rumors of a romance going around about them.

"Honestly," says Maureen, "all you have to do is talk together and everyone says you're dating!" And she shakes her head and makes a face.

It isn't that Barry's not the kind of guy Maureen would enjoy dating. It's just that right now they're having a great time working together and just being Brady "brother and sister."

course, Bobby enjoyed it, as usual.

Bobby admits he's basically a loner!

Although you probably wouldn't think of Bobby as being a person who keeps mostly to himself, that's exactly the kind of guy he is most of the time.

He confides, "I really don't have all that much social life. It's partly because I enjoy being alone and partly because I don't have a lot of time for socializing. Most of the time I'm working or preparing my work."

Don't start feeling sorry for Bobby, though. He doesn't feel sorry for himself. In fact, he's completely happy with the way he lives. He enjoys his work very much. And because the time he spends with friends and people close to him is so limited, it becomes all the more precious! (Continued on page 62)
