much of it was touched by the young lady's unabashed though unrequited love for Mr. David Cassidy?

"As long as I have known David, there have been girls in his life," says a former roommate.

"There was a girl he had really liked while in junior high school, the first time he had really gotten serious.

"Anyway, he'd been trying to get this girl to go out with him for some time, but she just wasn't interested! He carried a torch for her for the entire year.

"To make it worse, most of the girls we knew were friends with this girl, and they all knew how David felt. And you know how high school girls talk about boys. Almost as much as the boys talk about the girls. So David made believe that this girl just didn't mean anything to him, and dated a lot of other girls at the school. He was popular, and had that happy personality of his, but he didn't really have a girlfriend he was really secure with until the 12th grade.

"Then he was dating a girl named Christy. She was a really pretty blonde, and a very nice girl. She and David went out together steadily for quite some time, and David couldn't have been happier. Then suddenly, for apparently no reason at all, Christy split! David was down in the dumps for months. And I'm not really sure that he's over her yet! He admitted to me just the other day that he still thinks an awful lot about her."

So during those important years in high school, when a boy is first initiated into male-female attraction, David had a few rough times. And, no doubt, they've left their mark, and colored all his following relationships with girls. First the girl he liked so much didn't pay any attention to him at all. She's probably the reason why David fell so fast, and so deeply for Christy. Christy became the one girl in David's past that he can't forget. She was the one girl who knew him best, who said she liked him better than all the other boys she knew—and then left him.

It's no wonder that now David is afraid of getting involved with another girl, no wonder he might really have to "delude" himself into an early marriage. Even though his high school days are far behind him, he remembers Christy. He may even still feel he's being faithful to her deep in his heart by not letting anyone else too close to him again. There's always the chance that, especially now that he's a star, Christy will have a change of heart.

There are other reasons why David may be afraid to love another girl just now—though he does make a lot of girls feel as if they're loved, which is the worst kind of shall we say . . . bigamy! David's dad, Jack Cassidy and his mother Evelyn Ward are divorced. Even though David has learned to accept, and even to love Shirley Jones as his mother, he still sees his real mom. The whole divorce incident reminds David that a person's feelings sometimes do change, and can cause a lot of heartbreak.

And to make matters worse, David, who has grown close to Shirley and Jack in recent years, has also witnessed their emotional ups and downs. Older than Shirley and Jack's children, Shaun, Patrick and Ryan, David was aware of what was happening when Jack wasn't always around. He understood that they were separated. Even
