DAVID CASSIDY

overworked for a long time. Concert tours fatigue him enormously. But was there another reason behind this? Maybe he wasn't spending enough time with his bride when he was blazing the concert trail? Could that be it?

POINT 2 Everyone loves a vacation. And when most of the Partridges took theirs, their whereabouts were common knowledge. Susan Dey once went to Europe, but more often went back home to stay with her family in Mount Kisco, New York. Shirley Jones either took short sojourns with her family or caught up on her own social life. The younger Partridges caught up on their homework. But David's vacations were always elusive. Fans could understand, that because he wanted a little privacy, he wouldn't publicize his vacation schedule. It was only after he had returned that anyone could find out where he had been—his movements were almost as private as Howard Hughes! On vacation David went to a friend's estate in Maryland and rode horses from a private stable. The estate sprawled over many acres and was strictly OFF-LIMITS to trespassers! Another time David went to England. Instead of staying in a hotel he rented a private yacht, with a full crew, and stayed far away from the madding crowd of autograph hunters. Was all this secrecy really necessary, you may be asking yourself. Was David just trying to get his head together in quiet? Or was he trying to keep the press from photographing him—and his bride—on their honeymoon?

POINT 3 David has moved around a lot. Since "The Partridge Family's" first season he has changed houses three times! Sam Hyman was always said to be David's "roommate." Actually, what is closer to the truth is that Sam lives in a small cottage on David's property, not with David in the same house. Now he and Sam have known each other for years and that's why they thought of rooming together in the first place. They really dig each other. But then why doesn't Sam live in the same house with David, as he used to when David first moved away from his parents and took an apartment with his friend? Is it because David prefers to be completely alone in his house? Or is it because David is really sharing that house with a closer "roomie," his new wife? You may shake your head, but you have to admit that is a possibility!

POINT 4 "The Partridge Family" is now having re-runs. When it begins again in September there will also be an all-
