

DAVID CASSIDY

Since I was a little kid I have admired my father's golden seal ring with our family crest on it. I figured being the oldest, someday — maybe when he was no longer here — I would inherit it. And, in fact, when I was in my early teens I told my father about it, never thinking I would get it at any time soon. But when I was 20, he had a duplicate made and gave it to me for Christmas. That meant more to me than anything I have ever received, from anybody, on any occasion.
