

THE power of TERRY WOGAN, the genial Irishman who is now reported to be paid a quarter of a million pounds for chatting to film stars, comes as a surprise to many of us.

It even rather shocked his fellow disc-jockey, GLORIA HUNNIFORD.

Miss Hunniford was suddenly told at the last minute that she could not have the pleasure of interviewing on her BBC radio show one DAVID CASSIDY. It was explained that Mr Cassidy was due to appear later that week on Mr. Wogan's new television programme.

It was a question, you see, of Wogan not being seen to deal with shop-soiled goods.

Miss Hunniford was very miffed by it all. Particularity when she heard that she had to make do with something called BONNIE LANGFORD.
