

Cassidy chilled by fan in duct

THE charms of Seventies pop icons die hard. Former teen idol David Cassidy has confessed that he is still the victim of obsessed fans — and has found one living in his air-conditioning duct.

The discovery has led Cassidy, who shot to fame on US sitcom The Partridge Family and had a string of hits in the Seventies, to think he will never escape the threat of stalkers.

"These people are a little unbalanced and they think because they see you on TV, they have a relationship with you, and it entitles them to move into an air-conditioning unit," rants an incredulous Cassidy, 51.

"Honest to God, somebody moved in — a girl who decided she had to be with me, but couldn't get in my house so she slept between my house and the air-conditioning unit," he adds.

"I discovered her because she was walking around in front of the house at night and I heard screaming. A guy had pulled over and tried to abduct her. So I called the police.

"First I am her rescuer and then it comes out that she is a stalker. It was bizarre, because you realise has been watching you and it's just weird. Kind of creepy." Very.

