

Mugshot . . . Cassidy

Cassidy in B-test charge

SEVENTIES teen idol David Cassidy has been charged with drink-driving after cops allegedly saw him swerving across a road in his Mercedes.

Officers said they watched the singer, now 60, veer across lanes and a hard shoulder before cutting up another motor.

They say a search revealed a half-empty bottle of bourbon in his car.

The Partridge Family star was pulled over in Florida on Wednesday. He told officers he had a glass of wine and a pain-killer hours earlier.

A breath test showed blood alcohol readings of 0.139 and 0.141 — way above the .08 legal limit.

Cassidy, who became a pin-up with hits like Daydreamer and How Can I Be Sure, insisted he was innocent and vowed to fight the charges.