

DAVID'S PERSONAL LETTER TO YOU

It's at times like that, that I find planes seem kinda small!

Nowadays, of course, I'm specially lucky, 'cos most times I travel on personal charter flights. So I'm mostly alone, with just a few friends who I know really well. Then it can be great. Maybe there'll be some pressmen, too... But, by the time we've been closeted together in a plane for a few hours, they usually feel more like friends than reporters anyway.

So any rough times these days usually come from me being very tired or uptight to start off with!

But one great moment that never fails, no matter how many times I fly, is the actual instant of lift-off... That wonderful surge of energy upwards that involves you in with it. Do you feel that way too? I certainly get a tremendous sense of elation at that moment, and I'd like to know if it affects you the same way... I sure hope it does, because it's a wonderful feeling.

BIRTHDAY

And I'll tell you another wonderful feeling I've been getting lately... It comes from the knowledge that you are thinking of me, and remembering my Birthday, even though I may be on the other side of the world.

And that's specially important, you know. Because, although I may be far away from you, it makes me feel I'm closer, which is really nice.

David meets Linda Powell, one of his many fans in Perth.

So thank you... Thank you from my heart.

You know, it takes something like a Birthday or Christmas to convince me that another year has passed—and even then I'm not too sure!!

The weeks and months seem to fly past so quickly. Christmas hardly seems to have been over before spring is here; and May, and my visit with you, is right on top of us already. I can hardly believe it! For one half of me it seems like I must've missed out on a couple of months... While the other half assures me that it seems like an age since the first plans for this trip were outlined.

EXPLANATION

Now how do you explain that? Short of me being mad! And that's an explanation I can do without, thanks!

Maybe you'd be interested to know how I figure it out. (If you're not, you'd best turn over right now, 'cos I'm going straight on regardless!). . . I reckon it's simply part of our mind's ability to exist on two time scales at once.

I'll bet you've often looked back into the past... perhaps re-living some happy memory, or shuddering at the thought of the worst moment of your life. Just the same way, I'll bet you've many a time thought, or planned, into the future... daydreams, hopes, intentions, premonitions. All of them exist in the future which our minds create for us.

Well now, you can have the past and future existing in your mind within a split second. Right?

So, if you can do that, what's the problem having two different time scales existing at the same time, too?

That's how I figure it anyhow. So now you know... Well, I couldn't waste my only vaguely scientific thought in years without telling you about it, could I?

And soon I'll be able to tell you things without writing them down at all! I can't wait for that. It may even be as soon as you read this.

I hope so. Because I can tell you one thing... It can't be soon enough for me!

Love,
David
