Hi!

As these lazy summer days drag on, I know that we're all hoping to make the most of the holiday period. Whether you're heading off to the country, to the seaside, or perhaps abroad, I hope that you'll be able to relax, rest, and enjoy these long days and warm nights.

I know David is! As you can read on page 18, David has a number of things on his holiday agenda. And, if you know David, you won't be too surprised to discover that his idea of a holiday is definitely not complete boredom! As he tells you in his Personal Letter, David's ingredients form a perfect recipe for summer fun.

And speaking of fun, that's exactly what's in store for all of us when we hear David's new album, David Cassidy Live. I know you're all waiting to hear it, but I've got some absolutely smashing news for you, as you'll be able to read in full on page 5.

You see, David, stubborn as he is, has decided that he's heard people tell him once too often that he's only good at singing the slower stuff. As you'll read, David has a pretty good answer for them!

In our other feature this month, we've talked to some of the people closest to David in the last year, both as performers and as friends. And they've given us a very clear picture of David, both as a friend and as a work mate. And I know that I don't have to tell you that the news is all good!

I also want to call your attention to this month's episode of The David Cassidy Story. As you know, we've always maintained that some members of the press have been unkind to David without a particularly good reason.

This month's episode of the story is especially interesting, because it explains how David learned to live with success and the press. I think he's done an especially good job, and I know that his first conflicts with the press were painful. So on page 12, you'll be able to find out just how David was able to adjust to his early successes.

Oh yes, and before I say good-bye, don't forget to enter the competition on page 6. It's not so much difficult as it is time consuming, but it's all for such a good cause—the Friends Of The Children Society need all the help they can get.

And, need I add, a chance to meet David in California is a prize that ought to tempt any one with good sense.

That's all for this month, see you in September.
