MAGAZINE

Hello!

The response to our "What Do You Know About David?" competition has been quite staggering and almost every single letter has been full of very thoughtful and often stimulating facts about David.

Very clearly David is a lucky superstar because he has dozens of loyal fans who realise the problems that he faces right now and understand what he is trying to achieve. The present period hasn't been easy either for him, or for us, but I am certain that the result will be well worth the effort he's now making.

Several of the winning entries are published in this issue and, of course, we'll continue to put in the best letters and features that we receive; so keep them coming, particularly if you feel that you know something special or poses some unusual facts about David.

One of the points that you have raised most frequently in your letters over the past few months has been the question of a large full colour photo of David in the centre pages of every issue. Just to prove that I DO take notice of what you say, you are going to have what you want in every issue from now on and I am sure you will agree that the first colour spread of David in this month's issue is really something.

Our photo offer has been a tremendous success. So many of you have mentioned it in your letter that I now realise that I should have given you the opportunity to buy some REAL glossy photos of David a long time ago—but better late than never!

The length of David's hair is also still a very controversial matter. Opinions for and against have been coming in thick and fast by every post. Finally, I decided the best thing to do was to sit down and divide a sample batch of letters into two piles, just to see how it came out. Oddly enough, the pile of those for long hair was far bigger than the one for short, so at least I know that I am still putting the right sort of photos in the David Cassidy Magazine. Personally, I don't think it matters what length David's hair is, it's the guy underneath that really counts . . . don't you agree?

Just another reminder about subscriptions. Please don't send money for subscriptions or renew existing ones until I give you more information on this page. The problems of postage are still with us, as there is every likelihood that the Post Office will increase both first and second class postage once again in the autumn, which, of course, gives us problems for any new subscriptions which we take on now for the next twelve months.

See you next month.
