all they've wanted. David respects other people's music and doesn't class fellow singers and groups... as rivals or competitors. As he has stated in many an interview, there is room for all sorts of music and there are musical tastes for every style... That's why he appreciates that not everyone is going to like him and that he will get knocked just like every other artist. So David has learned to take criticism and this is just one of the qualities which have made him the person he is."

Well, that was just a part of Caroline's letter—see what we meant about the length! Without wasting any more space, therefore, let's move straight on to the prize-winning entry on 'David's Home'. That came from Sue Bell of Ashford in Kent, who won by a hair's breadth only over Pam Carrington of Birkenhead, Merseyside, and Alexis Scott from Hamilton, Lanarkshire. Congratulations to you all... Anyone would think you'd been on a guided tour of the premises! You've certainly got a great memory for the details of what you read about David. Sue claimed one advantage over Pam and Alexis, as you can read from her letter:

"My step-brother is a reporter in America and has had the chance to visit David in his home near L.A. He has told me every detail..."

"Home for David Cassidy is a one storey ranch-like house set in a valley about half an hour's drive from L.A. It was once owned by Chad Stewart of the British singing duo, Chad and Jeremy. When David moved in, it was decorated in psychedelic colours, but David has spent a lot of time stripping it back to its original state.

"The main living-room is large and is dominated by two things: a large, almost wall-sized Mexican painting in reds and browns and an open fireplace. Beside the fireplace is a pair of bellows and a ready pile of logs. Nailed to the centre of the fireplace is the shoe of one of David's first horses to race.

"David's favourite piece of furniture is a rocking chair given to him by Ruth Aarons. Next to this is an original Tiffany lamp which he bought at an antique store. The walls
