Hello!

Isn't it marvellous to have David back on the scene—and in the charts—once again.

As no doubt you have already heard, the B side of David's new single, 'Get It Up For Love', was originally going to be his new release in this country, but objections were raised by several people including the Beeb, so the title was changed to 'I Write The Songs.'

I believe it's very unfair to have forced David to do this because, although 'I Write The Songs' is a very good example of the new type of record that David promised us, 'Get It Up For Love' is really what it's all about! But I won't say anymore about that as we have got a feature on the subject in this issue plus eleven new tracks to fascinate us with the release of David's new album.

I hope you managed to see or hear David at least once whilst he was over here because some of the newspaper reports spent far too much time on what David said he wasn't going to do any more, instead of what he is!

David has always been very grateful to his real fans in this country and by that, of course, I mean you. And he does show his appreciation whenever it's possible. Usually, of course, there are so many people around that if he does stop to give autographs or talk to people things get out of hand. But this time he did get several chances to talk to his fans. On the night of Wednesday, 25th June, as David and his friend and photographer, Henry Diltz, were driving past RCA's headquarters in London when they saw several fans waiting outside. David promptly asked for the car to be stopped so that he could go over and chat to everybody.

Another lucky fan managed to squeeze herself into a reception at a London nightclub for David and actually spent over fifteen minutes talking to her idol, before he was whisked off to meet more journalists. Bet she'll remember that moment for a long time.

I am sure that you will agree lots of the photos in this month's issue are very different from anything you have seen before, particularly the ones of David in his tennis gear. No, he's not a candidate for next year's Wimbledon. But the reports are that he's a pretty good tennis player. In fact, he plays most days now at a friend's home. He's always believed in keeping fit—you've got to when you're a top show business personality dashing around the world making appearances on radio and television one week and then spending long hours in the recording studio the next.

See you next month.
