Hi there!

David seems to like us! In fact, he's becoming a positive Anglophile these days - meaning of course that he loves all things British.

When he came over here for the launch of his new single, he told me that he liked our country so much that he was going to come back to record songs for his next single and album at one of our recording studios. In fact, he may well be standing in front of a microphone in a certain studio in the country by the time you're reading this because when he flew out back to Los Angeles in July, he said that he was going to do a bit of business in LA, then he'd spend a few weeks at his Hawaii hideaway and after that he'd be coming straight back to record.

Thanks very much for all your letters. The question that was asked more frequently than any other was When is David coming back? Which I have answered fully above. But many of you were worried about the various articles which have appeared in other magazines and newspapers during David's visit. Some of you said that you were upset because of what they said. I know how you feel because I get just as annoyed as you do. One or two of them tried to give the impression that David had never enjoyed anything at all about his television series, or anything else to do with that particular period of his life. It is quite true, of course, that David did eventually decide that he wanted to do something completely different from the television series, but to say that he hated everything about it or never had any fun during that time is ridiculous. What he didn't like at all was the way that he was sometimes sold like a new type of cornflakes. This, of course, is something that is peculiarly American. Whenever they are promoting a new film or product, they seem to go over the top and this undoubtedly happened in David Cassidy's case. Anyone can have too much of all the ballyhoo that goes with being a superstar in the States.

Finally, of course, the pressure becomes unbearable and people just want to get away from it all, which is basically what happened to David. But to suggest that David was referring to his fans is nonsense, otherwise he certainly wouldn't spend as much time as he normally does on every trip to this country talking to them. Can I just remind you once again that the new fan club wallet is not available yet, so you should not send in any money until I tell you on this page to do so. Otherwise, you will only end up with photos and posters that you already have from your previous membership.
