

AT HOME WITH DAVID

If you were to ask David what he does when he's at home, it's ten to one he'd come up with something like the following answer:

"Well, nothing much, I guess. I've just been sort of taking things easy . . . working on my music a bit, seeing some friends, maybe going down to the beach . . . just unwinding, you know." That is not a direct quotation, but it gives the general flavour of hundreds of comments David's made at various times to journalists and interviewers.

Now, if you take that account of his leisure time at its face value, it gets to sound like being just slightly boring. At any rate, you couldn't by the wildest stretch of the imagination call it 'busy'!

You only have to spend a little time with David, however, to realise that his own comments are very far from giving a genuine impression of his activities. In truth, he hardly ever stops!

Yet he's not being intentionally misleading in his comments to the press. It's just that, as he points out, when someone asks you a question like that, you suddenly seem to forget everything that sounds remotely interesting and come out of it all sounding like the prize bore of all time!

I guess it's like when you learn something in school and you know it perfectly well — or near enough — till it crops up in an examination, when your whole mind suddenly goes a complete blank and the upshot is that everybody reckons you must be the dumbbo of the year.

Well, take it from me (as if you had to) David is as far from being a bore as you can imagine, and his life is as full and varied as they come, even when he isn't involved in filming, concerts or recording.

By now, everyone in the world must know about his horticultural (i.e. gardening, to you and me) ventures. His tomatoes are really a source of pride to him, and he doesn't regret a single moment of the
