MAGAZINE

Hello,

Thank you for all your letters about David's new album. Don't forget that I'm going to print a special readers' review of 'The Higher They Climb, The Harder They Fall', in our November issue. If you've got anything you'd like to say, please do jot it down on paper and get it to me as quickly as possible so that I can consider it for inclusion when I go through all the entries. As I said last month, every reader who gets part, or all of their letter, printed in the November issue will receive a cheque for £5 from me.

David's new album has already hit the lower end of the album charts. RCA say that they expect it to sell steadily and constantly over the coming months, as people get to know and like the album.

The only reason a single or album shoots to the top of the charts is because it sells a very large quantity in a very short period. Many other wellknown artists, of course, sell steadily over many months and in the end sell just as many records, but their releases don't necessarily get into the Top Ten every time.

This month we are publishing the last episode of the David Cassidy story. Every issue for the past three years we have given you another piece in the jigsaw of David's life story. Now we have reached the stage where the magazine was launched in this country and so everyone who had collected every issue will have a complete record of what David has done over the past three and a half years. I hope that you enjoyed reading about David's early days and rise to stardom. Certainly many of the facts that have been revealed month by month have intrigued and surprised many of his fans.

Thanks also for mentioning the up-to-date photographs of David we are now printing in each issue. As many of you have pointed out, David has changed his hairstyle quite dramatically. Unlike so many other superstars, David seems to be able to adopt almost any style of clothes and make them look good.

Please do remember that we are not accepting any more subscriptions at present. In fact, we haven't been adding any new names on our list for at least a couple of months. The reason, is that the cost of postage keeps changing - twice this year already - which makes it impossible for us to estimate how much to charge you for twelve issues of the magazine, because we just don't know if the Post Office are going to put up the price two or three times during the course of the year.

Sorry about this, but of course, we are always happy to send you single copies. So if you do miss any issues, all you have to do is to write to our Back Issues Department and we'll send the latest issue off to you.

By the way, will Lynne Richards of Wilmslow, Cheshire, please let me have her full address so that I can pass on all the letters which have been sent to her.

See you next month.

Pat
