I Quit!

Below are 10 stars who walked away from plum roles...for better or worse!

1 David Caruso

Year: 1994 Show: NYPD Blue

The then 38-year-old actor infuriated producers, fans and castmates alike when he quit the acclaimed police drama after just one season to pursue a film career. It didn't help that he arrogantly predicted during the bitter contract dispute that followed that "NYPD Blue will not be successful when I leave."

Postscript: His movie career a flop ("Kiss of Death," "Jade"), Caruso returned to TV in the short-lived 1997 series Michael Hayes before once again hitting the television jackpot by landing the coveted lead role on CSI: Miami.

2 Mario Vazquez

Year: 2005 Show: American Idol

Just days after being named one of the 12 finalists in Season 4, Vazquez announced that he was dropping out of the competition for "personal reasons." When none surfaced, it was assumed that the singer—confident he would win—decided to take his chances on landing a recording contract on his own rather than be beholden to Idol execs.

Postscript: The strategy appears to have paid off. Vazquez landed a deal with music mogul Clive Davis's J Records; his debut album was released in September 2006.

3 Shelley Long

Year: 1987 Show: Cheers

Long hung up her barmaid apron after five seasons, in the hopes of becoming a movie star. Though she would never recapture her sitcom success, she insists she has no regrets. "People ask why I don't beat myself up for having left Cheers too early," Shelley says. "How can I when, if presented with the same scenario, I'd do the same thing?"

Postscript: After a string of forgettable flicks, she was back on the tube, doing made-for-television movies, a sitcom with Treat Williams and, most recently, a guest-starring role on Boston Legal.

4 David Cassidy

Year: 1974 Show: The Partridge Family

One of the biggest teen idols ever (the David Cassidy Fan Club was larger than both Elvis's and the Beatles'), Cassidy nonetheless chose to walk away from the show that made him famous. Already tired of being hounded by fans and the press, he made his decision after a 14-year-old British girl with a weak heart died after being crushed by a mob of fans who got carried away at one of his concerts.

Postscript: David spends most of his time breeding and racing Thoroughbreds, though he still performs in concert.
