

■ David Cassidy's done a lot of living for a young man of 21. From the time he was three, David, who's the son of actor Jack Cassidy, knew that he wanted to follow in his famous dad's footsteps. When David got a little older he realized that a career in show business wasn't all fun and games, and required such things as acting lessons at the tender age of eight. But David's sacrifices have certainly paid off. This fall he begins his second season co-starring with his talented stepmom Shirley Jones on ABC's hit series, The Partridge Family. At first, David took everything seriously—the series, his sudden fame, his recording career—but he soon realized that all work and no play make a very dull life. So, now he's taking it easy and doing the best job he can. Also, David's spending more time with his family and friends and doing all the things he loves to do, like horseback riding and playing tennis.

Yes, David Cassidy's learning to worry less and enjoy life, and all the beautiful things it offers, more. ■
