

For David Cassidy, show business is his whole life. . .for the moment. He has admitted that he would like to get married. . .but not right now.

when they drop out, how far they drop out, or even for how long they drop out of the mainstream of contemporary society. . .there are no rules at all!

Age is no barrier either, although it is usually the young who go through that period in life that might best be described as "the dropout crisis."

Take David Cassidy for instance. As one of the young stars of the unbelievably popular, "The Partridge Family" television weekly, he is successful in a socially acceptable profession and would generally be considered as being anything but a dropout from society. But there was a time-- not all that long ago -- when the younger David might have gone the other way and dropped out all the way. Of course David has long since passed the real crisis but the memory of that time is still with him and with those who are close to him.

Being from a theatrical family (and a good one
(Continued on page 82)