

torium. He was looking a little tired, but by the time we got to the stage, he was ready to go. He chatted with the musicians, and then went on and did his best show of the tour! The kids in the audience were at a fever pitch, and when he rushed off and into the car, they all ran for the stage door. He got off safely, but they didn't believe he was gone, and they stood around shouting for him. When they brought the wardrobe trunk out, they all thought he was hiding in it, and they wouldn't let it through! It took us quite a while to get everything out.

The instant David got back to the hotel he had to start packing. His call on the "Partridge Family" set was for 7:00 the next morning, so he had to charter a special plane to get him back to L.A. by 3:00 A.M. David looked tired, but very happy. He loves to perform, even on a back-breaking schedule like this one, and as he left for the airport he thanked everyone who had helped on the tour, and all the people who had waited on him at the hotel. I really don't know how he does it. If it had been me, they would have had to carry me out!

All in all, it was a very exciting tour, with a few scary moments, but David loved almost every minute of it! I hope anyone who reads this realizes that being a star is more work than you could imagine—and the next time you see David perform for you, I hope you can remember how hard he's pushing himself, if he doesn't give that extra encore you were yelling for!

See you soon, I hope, and I'll be sure to write about the next tour for you, too!

Take care of yourselves for David and me, okay?
