

DAVID CASSIDY: the one thing that stops his marriage

IT'S EASY to see why David Cassidy's one of the most popular young actors on TV today. He's good-looking, talented, easy-going and has a very calm, gentle, fun-loving personality. And it's all real.

In his private life, David comes across in just the same way. The only possession he has that indicates his star status is his new sprawling house in the Hollywood Hills complete with swimming pool, library, sunken bathtub, dual living rooms and pool table. But he doesn't even own that. He just rents it. As far as he's concerned, he would have preferred to remain in the quiet little rustic house he used to live in in Laurel Canyon. But it stopped being quiet when news of its whereabouts leaked out to some of his fans. So one night, with aid of a few friends and a rented truck, David packed his things and moved into the new place.

(continued on page 70)

