

behind him and gave me a shaky smile.

Sitting with guitar in hand, picking out a beat, David began to relax for the first time since the girl brought back so many memories for him—memories of his vacation at Lake Arrowhead!

As though it were only yesterday, David spoke to me in a quiet voice and poured out the whole story. Shaking his head in disbelief he recalled, "It was about 6:30 in the morning; the air was so fresh, the sun was beginning to shine, and I could remember how blue and icy the water was.

"Wow," David shook his head, "I still can't believe it all. I can't forget the look on my cousin's face when it all happened." Offering me a soft drink he went on. "You know, my family is a nut for boats, and my uncle and aunt had a villa in Lake Arrowhead, and you better believe I took every advantage of using it. (Please turn to page 54)

As soon as work is over for the day, David hops into his car and starts house-hunting. He says too many people know where he lives and he needs more privacy.

David has been appearing in concerts all over the country. He loves singing and playing the guitar, and is happy the audiences are going for him in a big way.

LEFT: David is positive he made a record recovery from a recent gall bladder operation because his body is in top shape from a lot of exercise and good food.
