

could see Neil coming up toward us, and the next thing I knew, David had twisted free and I saw him break through the surface of the water, lunging for air!

GASPING FOR AIR

After a minute longer, I went to the top too, and found him hanging on to the side of the boat, gasping for breath and white in the face. The tiny valve that lets air out of a mask and keeps water from coming in had gotten stuck open, twisted to one side, and his mask had filled with water! He couldn't breathe without taking in salt-water, and he was actually drowning before our very eyes!

That was it for that day. By the time we touched land again, David was over his fright and even laughing about it, and we all joined in. But that night, I had a nightmare, and I can't really think about it without shuddering. What would have happened if he had gone into the submarine and the valve had broken in there ?

David cries: "They Won't Let Me Near You!" Amazing, true story. All in August Tiger Beat on sale July 13!
