

DAVID CASSIDY'S BACHELOR PAD— WHO'LL SHARE IT WITH HIM?

Young Mr. Cassidy has a lot of free evenings and a brand-new apartment...
Now all he needs is the girl...

Up until recently David Cassidy had a big problem—how to furnish that Hollywood bachelor pad he's been occupying, sans parents, since last year. According to his stepmother and TV co-star, Shirley Jones, David's decor for his teenager-about-town studio apartment had been "orange boxes and apple crates."

Unlike some young people who choose to leave their parents' nest and strike out on their own, David's dilemma certainly wasn't an economic one. As a featured regular on TV's hit series "The Partridge Family," he certainly had enough of an income to afford at least a couch and a few end tables. The truth of the matter was—David just never had the time (for shopping, that is!).

Filming a weekly TV situation comedy, even for a spirited young performer like David, can be a pretty tiring and time-consuming business. So when he wasn't busy rehearsing at the studio or memorizing a new script, who can blame David if he really just felt like relaxing, and not browsing through the downtown furniture departments?

Finally, however, David licked his interior decorating problem once and for all.

A few weeks ago he moved out of that empty studio pad and rented a furnished home, which—although it probably takes a bigger chunk out of his weekly paycheck—certainly solves the "orange crates and apple boxes" situation.

Now all David needs is one more item to really make his plush new residence comfy and complete—someone to share it with!

Of course, a handsome young bachelor like David Cassidy shouldn't have any worries in that department. Since his rise to TV stardom, he receives four or five
