—not needing to speak for they know what the other is thinking. Her hand will be resting gently in his and he watches her stare into the fire—and he will love how the fire creates a glow around her face—a face so tender and loving—a face that he loves and knows so well . . .!

David's thoughts are interrupted by the clicking of the record arm as the song ends. The room is quiet once more, bringing David out of his dreams. Music is such a part of him that he can become totally involved in a song—especially one that expresses so well what he is looking for.

His gaze wanders to the window and he wonders how many people have found their dreams! He knows that he has more than most people have, even in their wildest dreams, cared to wish for: a successful career and fans who are loyal in their love and admiration for him; a position where he enjoys what he does and at the same time can bring such enjoyment for those who love him!

But yet, he lacks that one element that would place him on top of everything! Something that every person needs and wants—love from one someone who was made to share it all!

David's smile returns to his face and only a trace of wistfulness remains. He remembers the words to the song once more and he knows in his heart that they are true and that when the time and place is right, he'll find his dream girl!

Just as the song says "I will find my way tonight, I'll see you in my dreams!" But maybe then, the dreams won't have to end as the song ends—because they'll be real!
