to leave—to sit outside by the front door.

ALL WAS QUIET

When David closed the door behind her, he breathed a slow sigh of relief. All was quiet, but for how long? How many other friends did these girls have whom they had given his address to? How did they get it in the first place?

After a refreshing shower and some clean clothes, David went upstairs to fix something for dinner. It was almost 8:30 already. He would watch "The Partridge Family," like he always did on Friday so he could watch to see where he could improve on his acting. This was very important to David and he always watched the show very critically.

But no sooner had he sat down with the quick dinner he had fixed—a salad and toasted waffles, than the phone rang. He picked it up. Keeping his eyes on the television set David spoke softly, "Hello?" But there wasn't any answer on the other end, only some giggling and then the sound of the dial tone.

When the phone rang again a few minutes later, David decided not to answer it. But after the 14th ring, he couldn't stand it any more. "Hello," he said, still trying to keep his voice pleasant.

"Is this David Cassidy?" said a breathless voice on the other end. "Yes, it is, can I help you?" David replied, but the phone went dead again!

OFTEN CALLED

Perhaps he should take the phone off the hook? But then he realized that Screen Gems, Western Recorders or even Partridge Producer Paul Witt, often called him on Friday night. He couldn't afford to miss an important business call.

Later that night when David let his dogs Sam and Sheesh out for a few minutes romp before bed,
