

DAVID: "Some are justified, most aren't. Everyone has the right to demonstrate, though, but all the demonstrations would be more understandable if the motives were more valid."

YOU: "What do you think of the 'race problem?'"

DAVID: "There is one. There's a great deal of discrimination in the United States; some people in this country just can't accept other people's beliefs without discriminating against them."

YOU: "What do you think about politics and politicians?"

DAVID: "They're just playing games."

YOU: "From games to clothes . . . what do you think about midi skirts?"

DAVID: "I hate them! I like girls in comfortable, free-flowing clothes."

YOU: "Last question coming up; I've already kept you longer than I was supposed to. What are your future plans and hopes?"

DAVID: "Just to take things in stride. And be happy."

YOU: "One more thing, please. What about marriage?"

DAVID: "Won't even think about it until I'm 30."

YOU: "Thank you for the greatest hour of my life!"

DAVID: "Thank you for the happiest hour since I've been in New York!"
