

own satisfaction as well as for his audience.

He's been working toward his career since he was three years old and saw his father, Jack Cassidy, perform for the first time. "I used to go around the house singing all the time," he explains. "I really always loved to sing. Music's so very important to me. But I'm enjoying acting just as much and hope to be able to always combine the two."

FANS

One of the most satisfying things about having a career such as David's is the appreciation he gets from the audience.

"I get loads of letters from terrific fans every day," he says. "I'm really sad that I can't answer them all. I just don't have the time. But knowing that all those fans are out there pulling for me is so important—it makes me feel good to hear them say they like me. Knowing that there are lots of people who really think I'm doing a good job makes me very happy."

So maybe tonight when David smiles just before he's about to fall asleep, it will be because he's thinking about that card or letter you sent.
