moody," she says, "but that just makes him even more interesting to be around."

David will occasionally go into a real down mood, though, and slink off to a corner of the studio. The Columbia Ranch is super-big, so there are plenty of spots to hide out.

Susan says, "David just sort-of sits there for awhile, looking very somber and mysterious."

But soon, he'll be up and back, smiling and laughing, as if nothing had happened. David works out his moods quickly, and is back at work ready to begin again!

"The Partridge Family" is subject to its own war of the generations! Jeremy and Suzanne, being the two littlest ones, find that teaming up is the best way to "conduct the battle."

One of the stunts they recently pulled was to hold a pine cone fight! They were sort-of playing dodge-ball, except they used those pointy cones. And guess who was their target? None other than Susan! She quickly found out just what "generation gap" meant to Jeremy and Suzanne!

David is very impressed with the power television has to reach everyone in the U.S. at the same time. He says, "The President can talk to the whole country... 200 million people... at once. And how many millions watched Tiny Tim's wedding, all at the same time!"

David's aware of this great power of the tube. But he also thinks it's not being used to the best advantage. He'd love to see TV bringing people together on lots of things to help them understand one another. And as a television performer, David hopes he'll be able to do his share in promoting understanding!

David thought "The Partridge Family" would be different than it's actually turned out! "I'd really expected it to be more of a family show with music, than a comedy," said David.

But as the show progressed, and music as well as comedy brought so much pleasure to everyone, David enjoyed himself, too.

He feels, "I'm very pleased with the show, and I really love everything about it."

And that sums up the feelings of everyone involved with "The Partridge Family"—cast members, crew, and, of course, you, the audience!
