

danny spills the beans on

Yep, that's me peeking through the stairs getting an earful on Susan and David's conversation! They don't call me Daring Danny for nothing!

Actually, though, I don't have to do much eavesdropping on them, because they don't mind talking to me. That's pretty flattering when you think of the difference in our ages! Over the past year I've been working with David and Susan, we've become good friends. Now I'm going to share some of the things I know about them with you!

FIRST IMPRESSION

I knew I was going to like David and Susan from the first moment we met. And I know they felt the same way about each other too. Everything was very polite—you know, "How do you do, I'm David..." etc. but coming through all that was a feeling that these are really nice people!

Second impressions are more important. That's when you've gotten to know each other better. Our second thoughts were that we were right the first time!

We have to start work plenty early, and neither David or Susan are happy about that! When David arrives he's usually still half-asleep and he doesn't want to talk to anybody for a while. His hair is messy because he's just washed it and he's been driving with all the car windows open.

Susan is sort of the same as far as being very quiet first thing in the morning. The main difference is that she's a whole lot prettier!

After a couple of hours, they become more like themselves—nice people!

BETWEEN SCENES

David is just like me in one respect—he likes to be on the go, doing things! Both of us can't stand just sitting around watching other people breathe!

So when we get a break in filming, we keep busy. We play Frisbee a lot, and David and I throw football passes at each other. One time he got hit right in the head. He didn't think it was too funny, but of course I thought it was hilarious! (It wasn't my head!)

He hits me a lot too, just for the fun of it. We wrestle, and the score is now 4 to 6—in my favor, naturally!

David and Susan spend a lot of time talking, too. They discuss everything, and they really have a lot of respect for each other's opinion.

There are times when they will go off in a corner and talk quietly together. I'm sure that they offer each other advice because being such good friends, they tell each other about things that are bugging them.

They help each other out with acting too. If a line is a little off or the pacing is slow, they clue each other in on what they think might improve the scene.

Honestly, I've never seen David and Susan get mad at each other! They never hold grudges or anything because they spend most of the time laughing and joking together. There just doesn't seem to be any room for disagreement, which is great when you consider how many hours we all spend with each other!

They do nice things for one another too! David was the one who suggested that the entire cast and crew pitch in and give Susan something extra special for her birthday. He knew what she really wanted. So we pooled our money and got her a cassette tape player, ra-
