the TV series stars eventually get the directing bug and end up either writing the show, directing it and acting in it. Many record, do personal appearances, write books, etc. One wonders just how much money they need to make. It makes the average person feel that he's doing nothing just going to the office and back home again.

Obviously it is not really the money. One suspects that it is a kind of show business momentum that gets going when everything is coming up roses. No one wants to stop the good luck from pouring in.

Naturally, David's doctors must have given him the go ahead signal saying he can go back to work. Possibly David told them of the urgency of his getting back to doing his TV show because the whole cast was standing by waiting for him. If it weren't safe for him to return to work we are certain they would put their foot down and tell him he'd have to wait.

Still, one wonders if David was entirely truthful about what work in his profession entails. In a recent "Hollywood Reporter", columnist Sue Cameron tells of a conversation she had with Bobby Sherman, whose career is similar to David's in that he does a weekly TV show, concert dates, personal appearances, recordings, etc. He, like David, really digs his fans and hates to disappoint them, so he works hard. Here is what he told her his days are like and remember, David's are practically the same!

"He is up at six each morning and on the set at 7:30. He works until lunch but he can't eat because his stomach is too tight from the pressure. During lunch I make phone calls to the affiliates around the country who are going to carry our show. I want to do everything I can to make it work," says Sherman. He leaves at 7:30 p.m. and is home by eight where he just has time to eat and look over the next day's script. Two weekends out of the month he does concerts and plugs the show in different cities. . . In addition to acting, Bobby Sherman makes hit records." That is how Sue Cameron describes Bobby's average day.

It is not hard to see that somewhere along the line both boys have to rehearse songs, have fittings for clothes, etc. Then there is the traveling, which as most of you know, is tiring in itself.

No wonder David Cassidy doesn't have much time left for dating or romance! Occasionally, he does take a girl to an event that he has to attend, like an ABC-TV party to introduce all the performers on the network. But on the whole he really has no time left to court a girl.

Naturally, there are sacrifices that have to be made if you want a career and David is willing to make them right now. But we can't help thinking that if he did have a girl who was close to him and loved him, she would most definitely tell him to slow down and not go back to work right after an operation.

It does seem that he needs a little personal attention and love like that in his life. Also, he might take that kind of advice from someone his own age, but think his parents are being over-cautious and tend to ignore their advice. They, in turn, may realize that he is at an age where he has to make his own decisions.
