

Fall will also mark the release of that new, long awaited JACK WILD album on the Capitol label. It will be the first one under the contract Jack signed, but far from the last!

And here's some good news for you Here Come The Brides Fans—although the series has been cancelled, syndicated reruns are planned, so you can follow the romances of the girls from Seattle and the lumberjacks all over again!

Series star ROBERT BROWN, in case you hadn't heard, will be back on TV soon.

"I've signed a contract at Warner Brothers," Robert reports, "and I'll be doing a new show in the near future. I'll also be making some movies, and I'm really looking forward to them!"

Robert has just moved into a new house, a Santa Monica Canyon home with plenty of room for his new family. "We needed the space," he tells us, "and it took lots of time to find just the right place. Right now, we're busy decorating—a full time job in itself!"

Speaking of houses, DENNIS COLE's place in Nicholas Canyon has a great view, but what a ride up! The road winds and twists, and at some points looking out the car window means looking straight down a mountain!

If you visit Dennis, as I did, you'll find workmen busy—and Dennis joining in.

"I tore down walls and really made a job for myself," Dennis, just back from a Nashville recording session (see our special contest and win his new record!), reveals.

"I like to work on the place, and I enjoy making furniture." Dennis is proud of his first project—a table he made from his own plans that looked as though it were a valuable antique—and his current project, a desk.

Besides talking about his home, Dennis gave us the scoop on his romantic life. "I'm tired of girls who are all involved in their careers," he admits. "There are lots of great girls in Hollywood, but some of them just are too concerned with work to think of anything else."
