PERSONAL DETAILS

BILL BIXBY
 Bill, having proved himself a successful actor in "The Courtship of Eddie's Father," wants to gain a few credits as a director, too. For five days and nights he spent all the free time he could preparing for his director's debut in "Gifts Are for Giving." Once he got over the initial panic of having 65 people waiting on the set for him to open his mouth—he did just fine. The only actor he had trouble with was himself. He was so excited about directing, he'd forgotten to learn his own lines!

JAMES BROLIN
 As "Dr. Steven Kiley," Jim is constantly on the go. Off-screen he keeps up the same pace. His life as a husband, father and sports enthusiast can be described as hectic and full. He enjoys skin diving, surfing, horseback riding and motorcycling. He lives with his family in San Fernando Valley, where he has enough land to breed and raise Appaloosa horses for racing.

STEVE BROOKS
 One of Steve's childhood daydreams was the wish to grow up and become a cartoonist. As a kid he admits to reading so many Walt Disney comic books, he could forge Mr. Disney's name better than he could write his own. But then in high school play, acting suddenly had more appeal than all the drawing boards in the world. And "Interns" fans are glad.

CAROL BURNETT
 Although Carol is a $500,000-a-year TV star, she thinks too much TV can hurt kids! When her daughters come home from school, she makes them play outside to keep them healthy. She allows them to watch only a few minutes of TV—before and after dinner. Her aim is to have physically-fit kids, not fat and weak ones.

ELIZABETH TAYLOR AND RICHARD BURTON
 Forty-five appears to be a great age for Richard Burton. Queen Elizabeth bestowed the decoration of the Commander of the British Empire on him and Elizabeth gave him a new Rolls-Royce. But Richard complains that age is beginning to slow him down, and he is thinking about retiring to the tiny Welsh village of Pontrhydyfen. Somehow Richard just doesn't seem like the retiring type!
