work then. It was just sort-of a creative exercise."

Now Chad's poems mean a lot to him and he's proud of his work.

"I'd really like to have my collection of poetry published," he confesses. "The only thing that worries me is that all my works come from the real me. They reflect my inner soul, my most personal moments. If I were to get my poems published, I might disappoint a lot of Chad Everett fans because then I just wouldn't be a mystery anymore."

DAVID CASSIDY: THE SPECIAL GIRL HE'LL NEVER POSSESS

"You make your own breaks," he's said. "You make your own happiness and your own fun. And you also cause yourself your own misery. I know a lot of people who've been through a lot heavier things that I have and it's far out the way some of them have been able to just throw it off the cuff. They're living one day at a time and they've figured out something important—it's far more pleasant to be happy than unhappy."

For David (and for now, anyway), being happy means doing what he's doing as far as work is concerned. He loves the idea of being able to combine acting and music into one job. And his Spring-Summer concert tour opened up a completely new avenue of work. Appearing on a regular series may be very hard work during the shooting season, but David loves the freedom it gives him during the show's frequent vacations from the camera. He's always been an avid traveller. Now that he has the money of his own, the time and the real need to rest and relax, he takes advantage of it.

How does a girl fit into all this? That may just be the problem. There may not be a girl who can fit into David's life right now. Not only would she have to appear at the right time and in the right place, she'd have to be the right kind of person—a very special kind indeed. She may not be out there... but David's going to have a good time looking.
