

that he'd certainly beat the drum for the institution of marriage. Yet just recently he told a reporter that he doesn't believe in legal marriage. He thinks people can live together without a piece of paper.

David, of course, is not alone in his views. Many young people are living together without benefit of clergy. And to be truthful, many of these couples are more devoted to each other than those who have taken public and legal vows together.

But that, in a way, is a marriage of sorts—or at the very least a commitment, and from David's attitude—it's just that commitment, and not marriage—that he's against.

Now David's name has been linked with that of various young ladies—most recently Frederika Myers and Susan Dey. But it's Room 222's Judy Strangis that has really stolen David's heart, say insiders. Indeed, at one point they were even reported to be secretly engaged. Hardly the thing to do if you don't believe in marriage. But when questioned about Judy and marriage, David does not go into his commitment-without-marriage-license song-and-dance.

Instead, he says: "I can't take the responsibility of marriage yet. I have too much of a problem with myself. I really don't have the time to devote to someone else.

"There are so many things I want to do! I want to travel and see the world."

Well, that may not be an endorsement for marriage right now—but it certainly doesn't

(Continued on page 53)