stay away!' Because I always really like Aries. But one thing about me that always discouraged David is that I'm from a very strict Catholic family, and Kevin would always tell David that I couldn't do this and I couldn't do that, how I had a curfew, and how strict my family was.

"In fact, David said recently that he even used to be afraid to hold my hand because I was such a respectable girl. And to this day, he'll try never to use any swear words in front of me. And if he does, he'll always say, 'Oh, Judy, I'm really sorry. Please excuse me!' And then he'll admit, 'I've got this mental thing about you in my head. I always remember what Kevin said.' That's why we both have a lot of respect for each other. . . ."

Yes, David Cassidy always remembers what Kevin told him about Judy—about what a nice girl she is, and how he must always respect her. Now that Kevin is gone, he has left this legacy of mutual respect between David and Judy—and he has left them the gift of their friendship for each other. It has helped sustain David through these most exciting yet most difficult days of his life when he needs true friends so much.

Judy and David will always be grateful to Kevin for the friendship they share—and they only wish that he could be here to enjoy the wonderful life they are living today. They miss him, they are heartbroken about his tragic death—but they cherish the memory of this talented, lost young boy, and they hope he has found peace at last. —JAMES GREGORY

Bill and Brenda were married at the home of his friend Mike Bain, united in a ceremony they had written themselves. The Rev. Mike Young, a Unitarian minister, officiated as the couple read to each other their individually composed disclosures of love.

"I'd thought I'd be a bachelor always," Bill confessed later, still dazzled by his good fortune. "But it all came together for me. I was ready to marry, and, when I realized it, I couldn't wait.

"She made me love her just by being Brenda, by not pushing it.

"If she'd tried to force anything, I might never have felt the way I do. But our wedding was one of the happiest moments of my life."

It didn't start out that way!

Bill and Brenda met eight years ago at a Deb Star Ball that she attended with Peter Brown.

Each found the other attractive, and they became friends, but neither imagined then that the friendship would turn into love.

As a matter of fact, Brenda and Bill would have been a most ill-assorted match at that time, for she was hardly more than a child, a giggly, energetic little dancer who could do backbends and
