admit that he was offended by the critical remarks.

"I wasn't really a quiet person, but I had a tendency to be shy, and when the casting director bellowed his remarks at me, I was as meek as a puppy," he recalls.

His determination to overcome such obstacles which he had learned in public school as well as Sunday School, made him vow to show the director that he could become a performer.

"It was a challenge, and I wanted to prove to myself that I could do it. Three years later I had proven to myself that my decision was right.

"And this is exactly what I mean when I suggest that Josh will be exposed to his church and his religious beliefs. I received my exposure, and it was my decision alone to explore and overcome the obstacles of such a profession. Josh was baptised as an infant, but I want him to make the 'coming forth' decision in public. Then it'll have meaning to him for the rest of his life.

"I don't want to leave the wrong impression. God will be a part of Josh's life; the intensity of that will be his decision."

In listening to Jim Brolin it is obvious that he deeply wants his son to believe and experience the goodness of church as he himself experienced. But it is equally as noticeable that unlike himself, he'll never be the parent to send his son to church.

"If it's that important to Josh, then it'll be that important to me."

in this business and behind a bar for twenty years. I know what it can do to you! If you've got hangover problems here's a remedy,—and then he gave me a list—clam juice, aspirin and something else. It was incredible.

"Eventually I'd like to write, produce and direct." Right now both he and Ann write. Other pastimes they share are painting; "She's much more serious and better than me," he says with pride; refurbishing antiques; and, when the weather is nice, swimming, boating and skiing.

Just then a key turned in the door and Ann entered. She's a pretty woman with long, red hair, a bright, friendly manner and a soft, gentle voice. As she lightly kissed Peter hello, she apologized, "I'm sorry I missed your interview. But then maybe it's better. I talk all the time and we wouldn't have gotten anything done!"

With the era of pretty people returning to the front, we predict that handsome Peter Rattray will have a long and successful career!
