Bobby did think about it. So did the girl. They both came to the same conclusion—that if they really loved one another, they could wait. Marriage was too important a thing to be jumped into.

That was a long time ago and Bobby and that particular girl did eventually break up. But Bobby learned a lesson about love he'll never forget. He knows that real love—the special lasting kind of love between a guy and a girl—needs time to grow before marriage can ever be considered.

Bobby's willing to wait for the right girl and the right kind of love. He thought he found her once, but he was wrong. Though he sometimes wonders what his life would be like had he married her back then, he still feels he made the right decision.

Love just can't be rushed, can't be taken advantage of and can't be taken for granted. Those are some of the lessons Bobby's learned from his experiences so far. The most important—that love is simply lovely. And he wouldn't want to do without it for a moment. ●

All kinds of girls interest David. He's not terribly particular when it comes to physical looks, although he's most attracted to "earthy girls," as he puts it. Attitude is important, however.

"I like positive girls," he said. "It's not just a positive feeling about me, but about life in general and what it means to be alive every day. It's just looking at the bright side of things and projecting that."

Girls who turn him off?
"I'm tired of people who are committed to everything," he explained. "I'm not saying it's not good to be committed to something. That's great and important. But being committed to everything because it's in vogue is a definite turn-off."

A definite turn-on for David is a girl who can fit into his way of life. As a super realistic guy, David prefers to live one day at a time. He doesn't spend hours listing his plans or far-away goals, and he doesn't look back and groan over things that have happened to him or that he's done.

"You make your own breaks," he's said. "You make your own happiness and your own fun. And you also cause yourself your own misery. I know a lot of people who've been through a lot heavier things than I have and it's far out the way some of them have been able to just throw it off the cuff. They're living one day at a time and they've figured out something important—it's far more pleasant to be happy than unhappy."

For David (and for now, anyway), being happy means doing what he's do-
