

David knew he needed some peaceful, quiet time to himself long before the series finished filming, before all those every-single-week-end concerts that have been scheduled all across the nation, and his serious illness this summer proved it even more conclusively.

But David's friends weren't really convinced that a trip to Europe alone was such a good idea. And his roommate Sam, who is a film editor, couldn't just leave his work because David had hiatus, and go with him. And his financial fix isn't in the same tax bracket, either, by several digits. Sam just plain couldn't afford to go. Neither could Al Rhodes, a buddy of David's since school days.

But just before Christmas, David took off for Europe but he went alone. He planned to buy a Volkswagen Bus-Camper—to travel alone, wherever his fancy takes him. He'll camp out where he likes—maybe sleep under the stars at night—while he ponders and reflects on the direction his life is taking, the pathway he wants it to follow. Hopefully, he'll come back rested and at peace with himself. He'll be in control again, ready for another hectic season when his popularity and success makes demands he had never dreamed of.

Susan's plans took a sudden about-face when she was asked to do a film for MGM—with Charles Heston and James Brolin. She'll play the role of Elly Brewster, described as a "delightfully stacked and outrageously dressed young woman." The movie—'Airborne'—began work the first week in January and knocked any plans she had made for a trip to Europe galley-west! For she felt she couldn't turn down the opportunity to add a good acting credit to her career.

There will be other days, other times, for her to tuck her trouble in a flightbag and take off for parts unknown, she reasoned. And actually, a movie role is just exactly what Susan needed to dissolve the boredom and frustrations she was suffering. She was finding the lack of challenge most disappointing of all. Having to show and hang-around "until quitting time," contributing "nothing more than maybe a 'Hi, mom' bit of dialogue," was part of the reason she's been so restless. Doing a movie would be fun for her.

During those last days of TV when they were both tired and in need of that long-awaited hiatus, a trip to Europe had been something to dream about, something to hope for and the same destination had appealed to both, though each had made his plans separately. But even then, Susan had said, "I keep hoping for better parts—but I can't continue to punish myself until they came about."

David's off alone on his search for a new perspective—on that dreamed-of jaunt to Europe.

Susan's left behind. But she, too, has found a new hope, a new outlook.

They're a pair of Partridges no longer house-bound, but flying high and seeing their world from brand-new, grand-new angles.
