

WHAT DAVID TAUGHT US

on complaining and sulking doesn't solve anything. It's a matter of responsibility, too. A person can show he's responsible about his duties when he learns to accept the fact that he hasn't got total control over anything except his own temper.

"When something doesn't work out like you want it to, don't blow up immediately. Try to be patient and work things out calmly. Then, if you keep smiling and just wait a minute, you'll find that other people will start calming down, too. Then, before you know it, the problems are all solved and feelings haven't been hurt by words said out of anger or irritation!" He looked at them a little shyly, then they all three laughed together at his embarrassment.

NOT LOST

But Suzanne and Brian had learned a lot from David that day. By his example, he showed them that he meant what he said. Although he was a little bashful about it, he honestly wanted to teach them about patience and responsibility as he saw them. And the lessons weren't lost. Suzanne and Brian had listened closely to his words because they were being said by a very special person. Their friend, their "teacher," whose trust and respect they cherished—David Cassidy!
