

CASSIDY

and ABC were getting together the cast for the pilot of a new series possibility. David tried for the part of the older son—coincidentally, Shirley Jones had already been chosen to play the mother—and he was selected.

Today, besides acting and singing on the series, David's career has branched out into other areas. He spends many of his weekends and vacations from the show traveling around the country doing concerts and personal appearances. He's also recording with "The Partridge Family" as well as doing solos. He enjoys jamming with his friends on free evenings and often writes his own music when he has the chance. In the future he'd like to do a lot more writing, have his own recording studio and eventually go into film production.

Though it may seem that entertaining is David's whole life—and he does consider it so at times—there are lots of other things that he enjoys. He's found that the best way to relax in the evenings after a hard day's work is by playing tennis. He also likes basketball and baseball and played both sports while he was in school. Horseback riding is another favorite of David's as well as water skiing and scuba diving, but he finds he doesn't have too much time for them anymore.

Though David loves attending plays, films and concerts, lately he's been spending his evenings at his Hollywood Hills home with his two roommates, Sam Hyman and Steve Ross, his dogs, Sam and Sheesh, and any friends who might like to drop over. Since David likes to get away from the city as well as avoid mob scenes, he often takes his dates for rides in the country and to pretty out-of-the-way places where they can just relax, be themselves and talk.

Right now there isn't any one special girl in David's life and he doesn't expect there to be for awhile. His work is very important to him, and he wants to continue doing his best for his own satisfaction—and yours! ● ●
