

CLOSE-UP WITH THE

Mayor Lindsay of New York may be out of the Presidential race, but he's taken a stand to keep John and Yoko here.

Mission: Impossible days may be over for duo, Barbara Bain and Martin Landau, but they'll star in a new series.

There's no denying it! Two escorts are better than one—or so Lana Turner would seem to be saying in this shot.

■ How does it feel to lose a big award? Judging from JANET SUZMAN, who was an Oscar contender for Nicholas And Alexandra (and who was nominated for several other top prizes, losing has its own consolations . . . and Janet, along with a healthy sampling of the Jet Set, was on hand for the Paris premiere of her flick—and, of course, the big post-premiere party SAM SPIEGEL gave.

Maxim's was the place, and the people included LIZA MINNELLI's old boyfriend—or "just friend," as Liza puts it—ALEXIS DE REDE; BRIGITTE BARDOT's old flame, GUNTHER SACHS, who seemed as interested in MARISSA BERENSEN as DAVID ROTHSCHILD is these days, ANDY WARHOL (doesn't he get around?) and JANE BIRKIN.

Nevertheless, it was very much Janet's night, and when asked how she felt about losing the Oscar race, she murmured a very cordial, "It was nice to be nominated."

■ I'm sorry to report that DENNIS COLE's Broadway debut in All The Girls Came Out To Play didn't exactly bring out the kindest words from the critics. Dennis believed in the property since he starred in it in Chicago, and there was a story going around that he had brought it to New York himself. Dennis, shirtless and in dungarees, made a hit with the girls in the audience (he wore this non-costume during most of the evening), but not enough of them came out to keep the show going more than a few nights.

■ While I'm reporting flops, I may as well go with a story I held back on hoping the ending would be happier . . . but there is no real chance of STEVE PEYTON and BELINDA MONTGOMERY getting back together. Since I was with them at The Candy Store the night before Steve proposed (you'll remember that he had the ring in his pocket, but I didn't stop talking long enough to let him ask Belinda The Question), I felt sad and sentimental when I learned the romance was over. But here's hoping a new someone comes along for both these wonderful people.

■ Burning is just what JACK CASSIDY was doing when he got a peak at those pictures of DAVID CASSIDY in the altogether. They appeared—the milder ones that is—in a rock mag, and David has some more revealing blow-ups at home. Jack was, if my sources are correct, taken a bit by surprise at seeing his son in the buff on the newsstands . . . and from what I hear, the long distance wires (Jack was in New York with a new play) were sizzling.