

And David knew it. There was a bond between them that neither of them could describe but deeply felt. David claimed it was because he and Shaun "marched to the same drummer—the same tune."

ALWAYS THERE

When the idea first came to Shaun about forming his own band, the first person he'd confided in was David. He knew that he could depend on David for an honest opinion about the idea.

And he hadn't been wrong. David was his friend, a person who was always there to turn to. He didn't give him advice or tease him about it but told Shaun some of the things he would have to plan and expect to happen.

A lot of the things Shaun already knew. His parents had been entertainers all their lives and show business was second nature to him. He knew that the glamorous side of entertaining was just a part of the whole picture. The rest was plain hard work and devotion.

And Shaun had listened to David. And because David had been honest with him, Shaun had told David of another ambition that he'd felt for a very long time but never really knew until recently.

FOOTLIGHTS AND FAME

He wanted to act. It wasn't the footlights fame that appealed to Shaun. It was the same feeling he had when it came to music.

It was the thrill of sharing with people. Acting was his way of communicating ideas to them... sharing thoughts through a characterization.