but I honestly believe that when it comes to make-up, girls should follow the advice from a song of the Beatles'—"Let It Be!"

Let your face be! There is no one in the world who wants to caress a cheek and then have to secretly wipe his hands on a tissue because his fingers were coated with make-up.

No one wants to kiss lips tenderly and then feel like he's kissed a carmel apple. Lipstick is great—or glosser, whatever you call it—but not when it's ten coats thick!

And eye make-up is really out-a-sight when it's put on well. Eyes are so wonderful anyway, showing so much of the person, that it's a shame to cover them with so much make-up that you can barely open them, much less use them expressively.

And one last thing I want to ask any girl who is listening. If it's your thing to wear false eyelashes—please be careful and learn how to wear them correctly. There is no graceful way for a guy to tell a girl—"Pardon me, but your lashes are slipping!" It's so much nicer to lean close and whisper—"You really are beautiful!"

Love, Dey
