

DAVID CASSIDY CONFESSES:

"I HAVE TO LIVE LIKE A FUGITIVE"

By Esther Bee

David Cassidy's a pretty lucky boy. He's made it big in the toughest business in the world, by doing all of the things he loves best. He's nuts for music. . .and he's got a hit TV series. Right? He's got two show business parents. . .three if you count stepmother Shirley Jones. . .and it must fill him with pride to follow so successfully in their footsteps. Right?

Wrong! For at the tender age of 20, young Mr. Cassidy has discovered that you pay for everything in this world. The higher the prize, the bigger the payments. And right now, David's paying that price by cutting himself off from areas which were once the most important in his life. "I have to live like a fugitive!" is the way David might put it. And no, he does not mean the fans who mob to see him wherever he appears anywhere. Though David's been described by just about everyone who knows him as, "a very private person," the adulation of the public

(Continued on page 78)