neighborhood team. Sometimes he winds up acting as referee when the two captains both pick him as their star player. As usual, he has a solution to this problem, too.

"I simply tell them to stop fighting because there's plenty of Bonduces to go around," Danny says. "My two brothers, John and Anthony, are good players, too. But I have to admit they're not as fast as me."

Considering all the energy he burns up, it's no wonder that Danny has such a hearty appetite at suppertime. In fact, his father often wonders where he puts all those second helpings. Both his mother and sister Cecelia really enjoy baking for him. His sweet tooth makes them both feel like top-notch chefs.

Danny doesn't see his eating habits as a problem. In fact, he often tells his mother how lucky she is to have only five hungry mouths to feed . . . he has a hundred and fifty-five. Since he digs cats so much, you see, he decided to start a feline farm.

"I have so many cats," Danny admits, "that I'm beginning to run out of names."

It's hard to imagine that Danny can't think of a million names if he has to. He's proven countless times that where there's a will there's a way for him.

SUZANNE

These days, Suzanne is spending more time in her house than she'd like to—looking for her dolls, baseballs and roller skates. But don't think it's because she's forgetful—actually, she's moved to a new home and still has some unpacking to do.

"My friends have to wait a few extra minutes for me to find things," Suzanne admits, "but never any longer. Since I can always count on my family to organize a search party, nothing stays lost for long."

Being the youngest of eight children certainly has its advantages and Suzanne is the first to admit it. She always has someone to go bike riding with, pitch a ball to, race to the top of a tree and—most important of all—talk with.

"I love listening to all the stories my brothers and sisters have to tell about their jobs and school," Suzanne says. "When we're together, we each have to take turns speaking or some of us would never be heard!"

Everyone is always eager to hear about Suzanne's latest adventures and hobbies, too. No matter how hard they try, it's impossible for them to keep up with her. Whether it's ballet or tap dancing or something new, she keeps the entire Crough household wondering what she'll be up to next.
