Why He Fears He'll Be Murdered In His Bed!

by JEANNE HALEY ■ Many people envy David Cassidy and wish their lives were like his. He has money, fame, millions of female fans and a hit television show. In other words, he has the kind of life that any normal 21-year-old guy wouldn't dare to dream about because it would seem like such an impossible dream. At least that's what people think . . . □ Many other male superstars have been gifted with the same things, but instead of making them feel proud, these things have only driven them into frightened and nervous seclusion. Look at Elvis, Tom Jones, Humperdinck—all of them are afraid to go out in public without being accompanied by an entourage of guards. And they live in constant fear that their lives may someday be snuffed out while performing on a nightclub stage. □ When David records a record at a local studio, two guards sit on top of the hood of his car making sure no one places a bomb in it while David is inside the studio working. Usually cooperative, David no longer poses freely for fans. Instead he now buries his head deep in the front of his coat. Why does he do this? Because he is scared of what might happen to him. □ One night after he had finished recording, he started out to get into his car and found that the guards weren't there. He immediately rushed back and hid in the doorway of the studio, nervously playing with his car keys until the guards came and escorted him into his car. □ If this isn't bad enough, David finds that he can't (Please turn to page 48)
