

DAVID CASSIDY

even get any sleep away from the studio on account of his constant feeling that someone is there waiting for him the minute the guards are out of sight. Therefore he has someone ride with him in the car while the two guards follow right behind, making sure he isn't being followed.

Perhaps the most tragic part of this story is that David Cassidy cannot even go home because he's afraid this person (or persons) knows where he lives. Thus he is registered at a Hollywood hotel under a fictitious name where every night he is safely escorted upstairs into his room, where one of his companions stays all night with him so that no one can harm him. However, one photographer found out he was staying there and besieged him with flashes one night after he had come back from recording. David immediately put his head down into the front of his coat and in a muffled frightened voice he said, "Please, quit taking those pictures."

When the photographer stopped, David thanked him and said good night. However, being puzzled, the photographer waited until the guards came back after seeing that David was safely in his room, and he asked them why David was so upset. "No one but you knows that David is staying here. If you flash pictures, someone is bound to be curious enough to want to know who you are snapping pictures of.

When they find out that it's David Cassidy, he will have to find another place. We don't want anyone to know he is staying here."

The question is why is David hiding? Who is it that he fears follows him and one day may murder him in his bed while he sleeps peacefully? Of what or whom we can't really say. One can only guess. But let's just hope his career will not take a turn for the worse in the way that Elvis' has.

Elvis used to perform all over the country. He'd do publicity stunts for his movies and he was always available to his fans.

Recently, Elvis has been unable to perform and has been rumored to be in and out of hospitals for the past few months. Many believe the cause of Elvis' ailments is his own personal fear that someone is trying to kill him. And Elvis has good reasons for his fears. Although most of his fans are kind and genuinely love him, he's met the other kind too.

Every day David Cassidy fights with all his strength to keep this fear from getting too much of a hold on him. However, since he has refused to go home and has decided to live in literal seclusion—it looks as if he's fighting a losing battle. And David has been involved in several incidents which convince him that his fears are justified.

Nevertheless, this constant fear is not the only reason for David's sudden change of attitude toward the public. The people who are working with him
