

There are some things that are naturally lovable — like soft puppies, cute teddy bears, cuddly kittens, and DAVID CASSIDY!

The picture on your bedroom wall always brings a smile of deep contentment to your lips. As you sleepily rub your eyes, then enjoy one final yawn and stretch in your warm bed, the sparkling hazel eyes from the picture greets you once again!

Suddenly, you're not sleepy anymore! Leaping from bed and grabbing your quilted bathrobe, you race up to the picture that helps start your day on a note of happiness everyday! You reach out and gently trace the lips of the boy who is so dear to your heart—and even though it's just a picture—you whisper, "Good morning, David Cassidy!"

You wait for a moment because it almost seems like the picture wants to answer you. For a split second, the eyes in the picture seem to be saying something to you!

NEVER GET TIRED

You've stared at the picture a thousand times ever since you put it up, but you never get tired of it. The way his carelessly tousled hair falls into his eyes, the tiny dimples near the corners of his mouth, even the way he tilts his head are details about David that you've studied dozens of times before. Yet, the more you stare at his picture—the longer you want to look at him!

You glance at the clock and tell yourself that you have a few extra minutes. So, you sit at the foot of your bed, rest your chin in your right hand and study David's face once more!

You decide that the most incredible thing about his face are his eyes. They seem so deep and sensitive! When he's happy, his eyes light up like the skies on a Fourth of July celebration. But when he's hurt, those same hazel eyes can't cover up the sorrow he feels inside!

You chuckle to yourself as you remember the day you tried to guess how long his eyelashes would measure! His lashes seemed so long! That day you decided they were twice as long as yours—but that only made you love him more!

His eyebrows are just as expressive as his eyes. You know by the way his brows curve when he is happy or sad. In this picture, he's very happy and you find yourself smiling back whenever you look at it!

A strand of his hair is just a fraction of an inch from his eyes, and you know that the second after the picture was snapped that he casually brushed the hair back in place. You sigh as you wish you could have been the girl to run your fingers through that wavy hair!

SWEET SMILE

Your gaze finally comes to his fabulous smile. Who could ever have such a sweet smile like David's you ask yourself. Then you hear your own voice answering out loud "No one!"

His lips are as perfect as those of an angel's—and to you, just as kissable too. David's smile, like his eyes, always show what mood he's in. There's the kind of smile he gives when everything in his world seems perfect. Then he sometimes smiles like a little boy who's been caught stealing cookies from the cookie jar. His little boy smile is one of your favorites.

David also has a certain smile that shows you that he sometimes feels very lost and lonely. When you see this sad smile of David's, you want to hug him and try to make his sadness disappear! Seeing these sad kind of pictures of David makes you want to protect him—and make sure that nothing and no one ever hurts him!

LOSE YOURSELF

Just when you're about to lose yourself into gazing into David's eyes once more, you hear your mother calling to you. You look at the clock again and realize that your few minutes with David has stretched into twenty minutes and that if you don't hurry you're going to be late for school!

You quickly run to your closet and try to choose an outfit to wear for school. As you open the closet doors, more pictures of David greet you. For a moment you're tempted to stare at these pictures for awhile, but your mom's voice calling you to breakfast tells you that you haven't got time!

As you make a mad dash towards the bathroom to wash your face before your younger sisters and brothers crowd in there too, you catch a glimpse of David's smiling face once more. And again you smile back—with a smile that will stay with you all day because David makes you so happy!
