HOME at LAST?

DAVID LOVES the high beamed ceiling in his new Encino home.

even after he had spent time talking to them and signing autographs.

They rang his phone at all hours, and then when he'd answer they would simply hang up. If he opened the door to let out his dogs, Sam and Sheesh, for a bit, they crowded in demanding his personal belongings for their collections.

And so he had moved to his Hollywood house. But this house was to bring him the heaviest heartache of all. It was here that his beloved dog Sam, who was nicknamed "Ricky," died. Ricky had been sick and although his death was peaceful, it caused sadness and pain in the heart of this boy who had raised him and loved him.

Before, when he had come home late from work, it was Ricky who bounded down the driveway
